Abstract:

The author praises native administration as an entrenched well-respected social system voluntarily accepted by the community. Native administration involved in public life of the community activities and, above all, it ensures communal peace. All these societal values are realized through consultation and mutual respect between tribal leaders and community members. Native administration resolves tribal disputes through reconciliation and forgiveness rather than through retributive justice. It also resolves pastures disputes and demarcation of pastoralist’s routes. Native administration participates in public and communal life such as health, agriculture, veterinary and vaccination.
